

STEPHEN LYNCH

Biography

Stephen Lynch has a way with words. Since launching his career at New York's legendary Catch A Rising Star, Lynch has quickly garnered a loyal following that can't get enough of his signature twisted love songs. With the August 2, 2000 premier of Stephen's first television special Comedy Central Presents Stephen Lynch and a forty-one-city college tour in support of his debut CD A Little Bit Special, he brings his unique comic vision to all.

A talented guitarist with an uncanny sense of comic timing, Lynch's boyish looks stand in stark contrast to the dark comedy that he sings in his outrageously funny one man stage show entitled, "I'LL SEE YOU IN HELL" An Evening of Love Songs. I'm looking for the same thing everyone else is, "laments Lynch, "true love". Lucky for us, he has yet to find it. For in his quest, Lynch turns to his vivid and dark imagination where he signs hilarious, if not mildly disturbing scenarios-such as the corpse he use to date, a romantic mishap with is pet gerbil and the accidental discovery that his girlfriend is a hermaphrodite.

The initial success of his early New York club appearances led Lynch to headline a sold out tour of major U.S. colleges and Universities, including Emory University and Beaver College (his favorite show to date). He has opened for such headline performers as Steven Wright, Jeff Foxworthy, Bobcat Goldthwait, Anthony Clark and Big Bad Voodoo Daddy. Television credits have included hosting VH-1's Street Games as well as appearances on Comedy Central's "Premium Blend" and "Hi-Fi Party", hosted by Sandra Bernhard and Issac Hayes.

Born in Kalamazoo, Michigan twenty-nine years ago, Stephen Lynch came to New York in 1996 via Los Angeles. When not performing to howling crowds, Lynch resides in New York City where he writes song and performs. Visit Stephen Lynch's website at www.stephenlynch.com.
